Keeping Kids Connected

We know that children do best in families. If a child or youth cannot live at home, the goal is to have them live with people they have established relationships with, such as extended family or friends. This is known as a kinship arrangement, when a relative or someone who is emotionally close to a child takes primary responsibility to care for and raise the child. During this time, Children's Aid Society continues to work with the child's family to re-establish a safe home environment. Our goal is to work with families to ensure children can live safely with their families.

Finding Kin

When Children's Aid Society is involved with a family, we ask children and their parents about extended family, friends, and other supports. We use a family finding process to bring together children, parents, extended family, and community.

Kinship Caregivers

Kin includes extended family, such as grandparents, aunts, uncles, cousins, or friends. It could also be any member of a child's circle or community with whom the child has an established relationship. Others, such as neighbours, teachers, coaches, members of religious community, or daycare providers, who know the child may also present a plan to care for the child.

Becoming a Kinship Caregiver

You can contact Children's Aid Society to present a plan of care for a child, or you may be contacted by a worker inquiring about your ability to help.

Assessing Kinship Caregivers

Once potential caregivers are found, an assessment is done to ensure their ability to provide and care for the child. Kinship caregivers must demonstrate their ability to meet the needs of the child as if they were the parents in the interim. They must also complete police background and child welfare checks.

Benefits to Children and Youth

Living with Kin

- Able to live with people they know and trust
 - Have strong sense of identity and belonging to their family
 - Are more likely to remain living with their siblings
 - Are more likely to remain in their community and are less likely to have to change schools
 - Are less likely to run away
 - Are better able to develop resiliency and the ability to grow into confident adults

Responsibilities of Kinship Caregivers

- Provide a safe, secure, supportive, and nurturing home
 - Participate in planning for the child
 - Help the child maintain a relationship with their parents
 - Be financially and legally responsible for the child's care

Support for Kin Caregivers

Kinship caregivers are assigned a support worker from Children's Aid Society to assist them in supporting children living in their home. Kinship caregivers may also be eligible for Temporary Care Assistance through Ontario Works, the Canada Child Benefit, and subsidized daycare.

Your Kinship Service Worker

- Helps create plans and goals for the child in your care
- Provides direction to community services and assists you with completing applications for services
- Supports you in working with the child's school
- Helps you and the child adjust to the new living arrangement

Legal Responsibilities

If a child is placed in your home through a court order, you have the right to a lawyer to support you in this process. You can request assistance from the Legal Aid Office (1-800-668-8258). If you are unable to obtain a lawyer, you can sign up to speak to Duty Counsel (a free lawyer provided by the court) on the day of court. To speak with Duty Counsel on the day of court, it is best to arrive as early as possible to sign up as there can be a long wait. For more information visit: www.legalaid.on.ca
